CompetitionFirstly, despite the strong economic relationship that exists between the two countries, China and the US remain strategic competitors.

The loss of crippling of a US carrier, by China, could also embolden other nations into defying American will, and trigger an international race to acquire whatever technology it was that China used.

The organisations then found additional opportunities for efficiency by consolidating the roles of common servers such as databases and web servers.

This prevents impulse buys.

The loss of face alone from a successful Chinese anti-carrier action would be devastating, and could dramatically shift public opinions 'back home'.

However, according to the results of the Innovation Index there is the potential for much more to be done.

This would apply regardless of whether or not China could actually breach carrier defenses.

In an increasingly deregulated and competitive utility market, controlling the cost of non-core business processes is critical.

It drives the competitiveness of firms and organisations in the global economy, and the quality of both private and public services.

In addition to this, questions have also been asked as to whether or not the entire Chinese program might be bluff, and whether or not the Navy would be willing to call it.
