Entirely separate from anything Dave has ever done, I used my blog to work for men's rights, father's rights, and the most important : unserved victims of domestic violence.

Freedom isn't exclusive, it has to be inclusive.

Liz, it's time to bend over backwards to create safety for men to speak on this subject.

I've tried to object, to point out the male-bash, and been told to lighten up, it's just a joke, or be strong, be a man.

His name was Len Miskulin.

I remember asking a perfectly civil question, and he came back with nonsense.

I've tried to object, to point out the male-bash, and been told to lighten up, it's just a joke, or be strong, be a man.

He had some publicity for a time, since he was the first; at least in the UK.

As a woman of education and influence, I feel diminished and insulted by events such as BlogHer, because that is precisely what they are designed to do.

In other words, shut the fuck up.

Even though we've exchanged a few e-mails over time, he still isn't quite sure who I am.

I know I got a lot of extremely angry and barely coherent e-mails from a guy.

There's a quite easy test to apply: if you think something said about a man is funny, try replacing a woman in there.

and let the rest of us live our lives with our men in peace.

My decision to discontinue posting here is actually far more positive than it may seem.

They are certainly divisive.

I thank God that Dave Winer had the cojones to bring it up.

I have been asked to support this action, and have ignored all requests.

Nowt but the body comin out after death.

His name was Len Miskulin.

That's called flash fiction.

I just used the blog to go further.

Not many people realise how deadly serious feminism is.

They are certainly divisive.

He is far more diplomatic and decent than I would be in the same situation.

I've tried to object, to point out the male-bash, and been told to lighten up, it's just a joke, or be strong, be a man.

These were things I'd already been working on.

If you fight for your freedom by supressing someone else's, well, the math just doesn't work.

Being a non-programmer myself, i wondered why it was this kind of deep geek lore merited a place among media references.

Why add more fuel to the fire of those who would set us against each other, while claiming to be "progressive" in some way?

No more gender-bashing, lecturing and name-calling, and no more tolerance for that.

Also by a disenfranchised father I knew for some time.

That's called flash fiction.

I will be focusing my efforts on setting up a program for abused men in my local area of Yuma, Arizona.

That's not nearly enough!

I've been a blogger ever since.

No more gender-bashing, lecturing and name-calling, and no more tolerance for that.

It's not proactive, it's not even very imaginative.

Gentlemen, there are so many fucking loose cannons in this movement I despair of ever being able to make positive gain.

I know I got a lot of extremely angry and barely coherent e-mails from a guy.

Nowt but the body comin out after death.

On a personal level, the reality is that this kind of stunt only causes harm.

And something I've only been learning in the last few years, if you're old, white and male, you're worth less than shit.

Feminism has always been about division, and disdain for those who will not believe.

How does this make any sense?

They are certainly divisive.

Nobody has any right to diss an entire class of people.

Our little base, and the small town of Yuma AZ really seems to be having a place in the national consciousness these days.
Many of your colleagues are already doing this.
A big benefit here; the library is well air-conditioned, and EVERYTHING IS FREE!

That's OK, I really can't expect somebody who likely gets hundreds of real emails every day to focus on one quirky lady.

Even women are getting sick of the condescension.
I'm old enough to know that there are far more bad, hateful things being said about men today than there ever were said about women in the last forty years.
